Docket No. 98N-1038
Food Irradiation Labels

I believe that consumers have a right to know if the foods they are buying have been irradiated. The radiation is a major step in food preparation and packaging and should therefore be indicated on the label.
If irradiation is safe, why should manufacturers care if it is boldly announced on the label?
If it is critical for food safety, shouldn't producers want to let consumers know which products are safe? We have a right to know! Please make the irradiation label Conspicuous, Prominent and Permanent!

Thank you,
